Jake Moore

With all the hype of Artificial Intelligence affecting every single industry, Jake has been researching how AI has also been benefiting cybercriminals. From text and image creation tools to audio and video generation, the next wave of cyberattacks is set to include an AI dimension and with powerful results. In Jake's latest escapade, he has ethically hacked a business using AI voice cloning technology and was able to steal the voice of the CEO and then money from the business completely unnoticed and in no time at all. From this talk you will learn how he achieved this but more importantly you will find out how to protect your company from this next generation of attacks.

- AI cyber attacks
- Voice cloning tactics to steal from a company
- Ethical hacking using the latest technology

Speaker Profile:

Jake Moore is the Global Cybersecurity Advisor for ESET, Europe's number one cyber security company. He helps businesses and employees understand cybersecurity and the risks involved to remain better protected. Jake previously worked for a UK Police force for 14 years investigating computer crime in the Digital Forensics Unit and Cybercrime Unit.
